Any additional features will be included in the next release. If you find bugs, please report them in the comments section at dr-chuck.net. # This is a small VB.Net and C# project that shows how to add multi-monitor support to your application. The purpose of the class is to manage multiple monitors and provide the user with the ability to switch between them. I've written the class to be easy to use. It doesn't require anything to be installed or referenced. Just add it to the form and all the code will work out of the box. Key Features - Show two or more monitors in a single Form (if you close the first monitor the app will close) - Add and remove monitors at will. - In addition to monitor detection,

I've added a function that allows you to query the primary monitor (this helps if you want to add a menu option that tells you the name of the current primary monitor) MultiMonitorUsage The use of this class is simple. I've included a class and some example code. Please try it out and let me know how it works for you. Attachments There are no attachments. Download You may find the download link at the bottom of the page. New Project When you create a new project, you'll be given the option to select between a VB.Net or C# version. If you choose C#, you'll have the option to create a Windows Form project, WPF project, Console project, or WPF and Console project. As you can see, it is very simple. If you click on the button to add the new monitor, the application will detect the presence of monitors and you'll be prompted to name and add the additional monitor. Show me the code Here is the
