He is a politician who likes to say one thing then do another. Here are some of the many things he has said that he will do if elected, and then when elected, changed his position on. One major promise was that he would close the infamous "Gitmo" prison. It took him four years to close the facility, and he is doing things "behind the scenes" to close the facility in December 2009. (CNN) As the primary campaign heats up, the Republican Senator from Arizona continues to balance various competing needs.... Just days after the end of his three-year detention at the notorious prison, McCain -- the first presidential candidate to visit the unit - is in high gear as the GOP field jockeys for position.... One of McCain's most dramatic shifts in position this year: He has joined most other leading candidates in openly admitting that Congress has failed to fight the influence of lobbyists in Washington.... The foreign policy realist is sounding a decidedly different note when it comes to defending the U.S. presence in Iraq.... Perhaps the McCain campaign's most dramatic -- yet unnoticed -- change: the senator now says that he backs an unpopular position on immigration -- but only if the legislation has some sort of crackdown on illegal immigrants.... On the Middle East, McCain has been voicing support for Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu's peace plan but he is cautious in expressing support for the Palestinian Authority, one of the central players in the plan.... One area where McCain is making an overt effort to be inclusive is with evangelicals.... ... McCain is not terribly popular among the base of Christian conservatives and evangelicals.... In a roll-out of his economic message for the Christian-left, McCain and his campaign distributed a book on tax policy and another book on managing money.... The gist of McCain's message: He is the first-place candidate among Christians for now.... On the subject of earmarks, McCain, who ba244e880a
