Prior to 1980, the main studies on the role of human speech were linguistic, ethnolinguistic and cognitive, and all these remain valid, as well as a study of animal communication. This was the period in which the cognitive approach to language became dominant. The new speech and language science of the 1980s was based on the idea of a structure of language. This was conceived in opposition to the old view of language as a semiotic system which was seen as chaotic. The most salient feature of the new approach was the abandonment of the assumption that language consists of a code, although speech is still conceived as a coded system. This change in perspective resulted in a number of new research areas being opened up, such as those dealing with the relationship between the language in the brain and language in the speech stream. The connection between the two systems is fundamental to this discipline of speech and language. G Yule Study of Language: G Yule Study of Language 4th ed: G Yule Study of Language. Studies in English have a long tradition of critical concern for the rhetoric of description and commentary. So it is not surprising that both sides of the Atlantic have tended to treat language and discourse about language with a high degree of formalism. In order to appreciate the true value of modern linguistics as applied to the study of literature we must understand both the technical developments in linguistics and the historical development of literary criticism. The study of literature was begun in France by Auguste Comte in the nineteenth century and expanded by Ferdinand de Saussure in the twentieth century.
