Jimmy Kimmel Jimmy Kimmel is having a bad week. The "Jimmy Kimmel Live" host laid into the White House for its response to the coronavirus outbreak, which has resulted in over 2,300 cases and 31 deaths in the US. "We are facing an unprecedented crisis in the country and the world and it is our job to keep people safe," said Kimmel. "Instead the president has told the country we need to wear a mask, not because we're infected but because we have feelings." During his monologue, Kimmel showed a clip of Trump saying in a recent interview with the Economist: "I'd say two weeks." He then showed a clip of Trump saying in the Oval Office briefing on Monday that Americans should "get used to" a period of 3-6 weeks of economic pain. "What are you saying?" asked Kimmel. "You think we're a country of quacks who are going to put on a mask to make ourselves feel better?" Kimmel then pointed out that the CDC said to cover your mouth and nose when you cough or sneeze, not wear a mask. "Trump claimed that masks would prevent you from walking around with the coronavirus and also prevent the virus from spreading, but there is no evidence that that's true," Kimmel said. "In fact, we now know that when people do wear masks it actually makes you more likely to catch the coronavirus." "We are not a country of quacks and we're not going to let this president go down in history as the leader who caused our first pandemic," Kimmel concluded. "Because we are the land of the free and home of the brave."
