Evaluation of the effect of serum transferrin on lymphocyte-mediated cytotoxicity. The effect of transferrin on lymphocyte-mediated cytotoxicity was studied. Transferrin caused an increase in the cytotoxicity of lymphocytes against a cytotoxic target, the P815 tumor. Anti-transferrin antibody abrogated the serum-transferrin-induced increase in cytotoxicity, and transferrin enhanced the cytotoxicity of allogeneic lymphocytes. The study suggests that transferrin in the serum increases the cytotoxic capacity of lymphocytes. Adipocytokine profile in subcutaneous adipose tissue of patients with anorexia nervosa.

Anorexia nervosa (AN) is associated with increased production of proinflammatory cytokines and decreased production of anti-inflammatory cytokines. We measured interleukin (IL)-6, IL-10, tumor necrosis factor (TNF)- α , and monocyte chemotactic protein (MCP)-1 in the plasma and in the adipose tissue of patients with AN and healthy women to test the hypothesis that these cytokines are more active locally than in the circulation. Fifty-eight women participated in the study: 15 patients with AN, 31 healthy women, and 12 patients with nonanorexic weight disorder (NA). Patients with AN were slightly younger than healthy women and had significantly lower body mass index. Although plasma levels of IL-6 and MCP-1 were similar in AN and NA patients, the adipose tissue content of IL-6 and MCP-1 and the IL-6/TNF- α ratio were higher in AN patients than in NA patients. TNF- α levels were similar in the plasma of all groups, but the adipose tissue content of TNF- α was higher in AN patients than in NA patients. IL-10 levels in the plasma of AN patients were similar to those of healthy women. The IL-10/TNF- α ratio was higher in patients with AN than in healthy women. These findings demonstrate increased levels of IL-6, IL-10, TNF- α , and MCP-1 in subcutaneous adipose tissue of AN patients. Lifeguards who found a small shark carcass at Del Mar on Friday were stunned to learn that the creature had a serious defect that
