A novel S1 nuclease assay for quantification of polymerase chain reaction. A novel simple and sensitive assay for quantification of polymerase chain reaction (PCR) has been developed. In this method, the amplified DNA as a template is treated with S1 nuclease enzyme to convert single-stranded DNAs into double-stranded DNAs; and then the PCR products are isolated and the double-stranded DNAs are quantitated by measuring the decreased amount of S1 nuclease digestion product. The procedure offers several advantages over more conventional methods. These advantages include the simplification of the protocols, the elimination of complicated steps (such as gel extraction of amplified DNA products) and the elimination of hazardous chemicals. With this procedure, we have shown that the DNA of human biliary mucosa contains a type of two adenovirus DNAs species, Ad. 1 and Ad. 8.

The present invention relates to an endoscope having a bending section. Generally, an endoscope is a medical instrument inserted into the body of a human being or an animal to observe the interior of a body cavity. In recent years, endoscopes have become widely used in the fields of not only medical treatment but also industrial treatment. An endoscope generally includes an insertion section, a treatment section provided at the distal end of the insertion section, an illumination section disposed at the distal end of the treatment section, a bending section disposed at the distal end of the insertion section, and a window section disposed at the distal end of the insertion section. The treatment section includes a distal end portion provided with a treatment section having a treatment tool, a treatment channel section provided with a treatment channel for allowing a treatment fluid to flow from the distal end portion to the treatment section, and a fluid supply channel for allowing the treatment fluid to flow from the treatment channel section. The insertion section includes a slender section in which an elongated cylindrical sheath having an inner lumen for inserting a long slender insertion section is inserted into the interior of the sheath, and a bending section in which the tip end of the inner lumen is bent. In the bending section of an endoscope, the she

The family of a disabled bus driver who was struck by lightning has paid tribute to him after he died in hospital. Supt Paul Hickling, 28, was killed when a bolt of lightning struck his bus in Marsh Road, Wrightington, as it was parked outside a convenience store on March 4. He was airlifted to Royal Preston Hospital, where he died three days later. Supt Hickling, who had worked for Gateshead Council for four years, was called to the scene by officers from the Environment Agency at around 12.53pm. He and officers from the agency entered a small garden on the right side of the bus, where they found a male who was believed to be in his 30s. He was pronounced dead at the scene. Supt Hickling had been due to have the rest of his shift on the bus, as he was an adviser to the South Tyneside Seaport service. Police investigating the incident have said a full post-mortem examination will take place.
