From time to time, NASA does collaborations with other space agencies in order to bring more people into the field and spread the love of space. But rarely do we see it on such a scale as with the Space Launch System. After nearly a decade in development, NASA has finally presented their plans for the Space Launch System to Congress. The agency plans to launch the SLS in around 2021 as the first heavy lift booster designed to carry crew and cargo into space. NASA is going to design and build a new large rocket that will replace the current 2d92ce491b
