The book was a favourite of Margaret Thatcher. The novel is a fictional, if highly graphic, account of a man named Michael O'Shea (not to be confused with Michael O'Shea, an Irish footballer) who is admitted to a mental hospital after being convicted of murdering his wife. He believes that his wife is a supernatural being who has turned her into a dog. As the novel unfolds, he develops an interest in a ward of madmen called "the cousins". The novel explores the lives and personalities of the inmates. The book is a blend of the supernatural and the psychological. It was filmed in 1978 by the BBC. References Category 2d92ce491b
