the fastest way to get a job is to have one. Well, this is certainly true for someone who wants to land a job as a graphic designer. Firstly, it helps to have a portfolio of previous work which you can show prospective employers. Normally, you will have a website which you can use for this purpose. Some graphic designers even have their portfolios on YouTube or other social media platforms, and many well-known websites (e.g. Dribbble) allow you to upload your work. You should also follow relevant graphic design blogs on the web and build up an online reputation in this way. Another thing that graphic designers should know is how to use Adobe Photoshop and Adobe Illustrator. These are the two primary graphic design programs that all designers should know and have installed on their computer. They are also the programs that most graphic designers use. Generally speaking, the first thing to do when you start a design job is to sit down and figure out what it is that you have to do to make the design a success. First and foremost, this will usually include coming up with an idea for the logo, business card, or packaging. In addition, many designers do at least some initial preparation work before they begin to make the design. This can include designing a logo, a business card or packaging, etc. In this week's new music playlist is the song Pump It Up by James Bay. Get ready to dance and do
