Public Space, the First Comprehensive Guide to Urban Public Space in English Public Space, the First Comprehensive Guide to Urban Public Space in English Civil Society was also founded by Douglas Crimp in the mid-1970s, and emerged as a pioneering figure in public art, and as a strong presence in New York's cultural scene, where the cityscape is considered to be one of the important elements in a human culture and sense of place. Crimp's writings are well known for their focus on the issues of public space and public life. From the beginning, Crimp has been interested in formal and material alternatives to the traditional gallery, and his work was marked with an emphasis on a non-institutionalised cultural practice which values open space and the freedom of voluntary access, based on an elaborate definition of the social and material conditions of public life. It was his involvement with the Bowery Poetry Club, a forum open to all interested individuals that provided a setting for open readings which had a profound influence on the emerging fields of alternative politics and progressive cultural institutions. The influence of Crimp's early work on the emerging field of conceptual art in the 1980s and 1990s is recognised by many artists and writers.
