We present data from Bexley Aids Drug Project in two sections. First, we describe some of the general policies of the Project, then we report on some of its specific responses to meet the specific needs of communities of minority ethnic groups (MEG) including African and South-Asian communities. The responses were designed to increase clients' likelihood of adhering to treatment, and include: a diversion scheme; wide health promotion activity; the use of trained lay counsellors and/or trained lay workers; initiatives to provide training and information materials on the HIV/AIDS and the use 3da54e8ca3
