Q: How to paste from multiple files in one command I'm trying to paste from a whole directory into one new file, but I keep running into problems. So far I've tried the following: paste * >> p.csv which copied each file individually. I also tried: paste * >> all.csv Which copied the files and then applied the paste command only to the last line (no errors). Then I've tried: paste * >> all.csv | tee -a p.csv Again, no errors, but it also just printed out the contents of the last file into the new file. How can I achieve the following behaviour: Copy all the files Append the paste command to each file in the directory The only way I could think of doing this, would be to split the directory into sub-directories and then individually paste the contents of each sub-directory into a single file. A: Try this, for i in *.csv ; do paste $i >> new.csv ; done A: I think you are looking for paste *.csv > all.csv (Note that > is used to overwrite instead of >>) A: Assuming your files are in the directory "p" and you want to overwrite (>>) the file "p.csv": paste *.csv >> p.csv If you want to append to an existing file: paste *.csv >> p.csv If you want to append to all the files in the current directory: paste *.csv >> all.csv The present invention relates to software defined networks (SDNs). More specifically, the present invention relates to the provisioning of Quality of Service (QoS) in SDNs. The explosive growth of data traffic within and between networks coupled by the Internet is causing an unprecedented demand for bandwidth and imposing a corresponding burden on telecommunication carriers to transmit that traffic. With increasing demand, telecommunication carriers have been forced to over 3e33713323
