Some of us would take the first bus out of the office at 11:30 and arrive home at 15:30. Well, that is OK. In our line of business, that is the routine. Others would stay till the early morning because they would work as late as possible. So it comes down to the hours worked. If you want to stay productive, though, you must be process-driven. From a very early age, we are all taught to be process-driven and to follow the rules. We are taught to be orderly, punctual, and hardworking. We describe the use of a real-time interactive simulation of the cytosolic free Ca2+ concentration to demonstrate the importance of time delays in calcium-activated processes. As a result of a potential calcium release from internal stores, a delayed rise in the cytosolic Ca2+ concentration is established in a realistic biochemical model of calcium signaling. Simulations of the corresponding delay equations match the experimental data extremely well. In contrast, control experiments without time delays lead to results that are essentially stochastic and deviate from the experimental data. Real-time interaction with the simulation is demonstrated using a Java-based interface. Our model can be extended to incorporate kinetic reactions for other biologically important second messengers such as cAMP and cGMP.Maude Lily Maude Lily (August 10, 1870 – April 8, 1925) was an American philanthropist and horsewoman, active in the women's suffrage movement.
