The law, which was developed in partnership with farmers and their unions, will bring in an updated version of Canada’s current pesticide law – the Pest Control Products Act. The new law is based on 12 key principles, which were agreed to by all stakeholders prior to the development of the proposal. The proposal is now being circulated to all Canadian stakeholders. “We’re honoured to partner with farmers and their unions to develop and present this proposal to Parliament,” said Terry Lake, CropLife Canada President. “A modern pesticide law is absolutely critical to Canadian farmers. We’re grateful to all those who have helped develop the proposal and for all those who will continue to play a role in its eventual success.” “The world has changed and the Canadian crop protection industry has as well,” said Mr. Lake. “A modern law that is supported by farm organizations and supported by the government is something that farmers need.” Mr. Lake noted the Pesticides Management Program Act, which entered into force on September 14, 2017, is a step in the right direction, but it still needs to be improved. In contrast to the law that was in force prior to September 14, the new law has several important features: Relatively no product has been placed on the restricted list – only two crop protection active ingredients have been placed on the restricted list The proposal contains important changes in crop safety and residues regulations The new law introduces important new measures in terms of sustainability This update will provide a lot of flexibility to farmers and crop protection products being developed and sold in Canada. Mr. Lake noted it has been challenging to convince certain stakeholders that the changes are a positive move for them, and it will be an ongoing challenge to address these concerns. However, he remains optimistic this will be a positive development for Canada’s pesticide-using farmers and their supply chain. “The proposed new law will enable them to develop new products and pursue their business strategies,” said Mr. Lake. “It will also ensure they have easy access to technical support.” Crop 3da54e8ca3
