E.g. the TCP protocol provides a single connection from the client to the server, which can be closed if the client is idle. The TCP implementation on the server side may have a fixed number of open TCP connections to which clients are allocated for a short period of time. To accommodate the client using the TCP/IP protocol, the present invention provides an advantageous peer-to-peer computer architecture and protocol that accomplishes resource sharing, access control, collaboration and detection of session abuse. It achieves an architecture that is scalable and performance constrained. The present invention eliminates the need for a central server and central user directories. Furthermore, the architecture and protocol of the present invention avoids the problems of having a single central authority, it reduces the problems of server load and it reduces the problems of malicious and abusive users.Costing and valuation study for the diagnosis of global aplastic anaemia. A cost-effectiveness analysis of the diagnosis of global aplastic anaemia (GAA) was conducted from a third-party perspective. The main outcome measure was the incremental cost per quality-adjusted life-year (QALY) gained from the diagnosis of GAA compared with the diagnosis of idiopathic thrombocytopenic purpura (ITP). A Markov simulation model with a lifetime time horizon was constructed and probabilistic sensitivity analysis was conducted on key variables to determine the robustness of the model. The primary data sources included a review of the English literature and interviews with experts. The model included six health states: GAA, ITP, treatment for GAA, no treatment for GAA, mortality due to ITP and mortality due to GAA. The patients were assumed to transition through these health states based on a life expectancy of 25 years. The literature review found that the cost per initial diagnosis of GAA was £5,745, while the annual cost per patient was £8,221, including hospital and community health care costs. The treatment costs in this article have been derived from the literature
