The last time we saw Tetsuya Nomura at E3 2016, he was brainstorming away on a new design for the many Final Fantasy games that have come out in the past few years. This time, he was there to take the stage with us to talk about Final Fantasy VII Remake. The first Final Fantasy VII Remake Demo was shown to the crowd at E3 this year, and I've had the chance to play it, and you can read my coverage for yourself here. The demo wasn't an extensive gameplay demo, but it was cool to see what kind of things we could do with the remake of the game, especially if you read my other coverage of it. Now, it appears that Square Enix is bringing the Final Fantasy VII remake to E3 2017, but this year they are holding a special event to reveal more details. Square Enix Says Final Fantasy VII Remake And Kingdom Hearts III Update Will Be In The Same State, Reveal More Details At The Square Enix E3 Special Event

Square Enix has revealed that both Final Fantasy VII Remake and Kingdom Hearts III will be in the same state they were just before they were shown in 2016. The event will be held in LA, and according to the official Square Enix E3 site, the venue will be the L.A. Live Arena on the corner of Hollywood and Figueroa Streets. The event will be livestreamed, and the video should start up soon if you want to see more about it. During the event, a new trailer for Final Fantasy VII Remake will be released. As well, the event will also have a panel with a number of Square Enix developers. Things like Crystal Tools, Lightning Returns, FFXVII Remake, and Kingdom Hearts III will be the subject of discussion at
