The co-occurrence of alcoholism and depression affects 24-33% of patients with major depression, and suicide represents the third most common cause of death in patients with major depression, accounting for roughly 1.5% of all deaths in this depressed population. The University of Chicago Institute for Public Health's National Opinion Research Center (NORC) has been designated as the Data Coordinating Center (DCC) for the National Drug Abuse Treatment Clinical Trials Network (U01AT001221), which is an international collaborative effort to conduct controlled clinical trials to assess the efficacy and cost-effectiveness of current pharmacological and behavioral treatments for alcoholism and substance abuse in comparison with standard of care. The NORC has a long-established track record of supporting randomized clinical trials in the conduct of public health-related research that focuses on preventing and treating addiction to alcohol and drugs, and has established a network of highly qualified staff, researchers, and collaborators to accomplish this goal. The DCC will provide central services for the Network, including the development and implementation of high-quality studies that meet the scientific needs of the Network and is charged with the task of assisting the NTCN in all aspects of study coordination and data acquisition. Because of its unique focus on the treatment of alcoholism and substance abuse, the DCC is ideally positioned to collaborate with and assist the NTCN in effectively pursuing the specific aims of the Network. The NORC is especially well-suited to fulfill these specific aims, having supported several of the Network's pilot studies (e.g., the Early Alcohol Relapse Prevention Intervention for Adolescents, TRANSCEND), and having extensive experience in the design, conduct, and statistical analysis of randomized controlled trials in the areas of alcoholism and substance abuse. Because of its involvement in the development, implementation
