[Relationship between cyclosporine A pharmacokinetics and its clinical efficacy in preventing acute rejection of transplanted organs]. The relationship between pharmacokinetics and clinical efficacy of cyclosporine (CyA) was examined in 42 renal transplant recipients. We evaluated the relationship between the dose of CyA (Neoral and Sandimmun), and its concentrations in plasma, and serum creatinine (Cr). Nephrotoxicity occurred in 11 out of 42 renal transplant recipients (26%). The median serum CyA concentrations at the time of transplantation were 1460 (ng/ml) (m-SEM = 365) (Neoral) and 520 (m-SEM = 185) (Sandimmun). The median CyA concentrations (m-SEM) at the time of rejecting episodes were 559 (m-SEM = 173) (Neoral) and 1110 (m-SEM = 374) (Sandimmun). These values were significantly lower than those of those of the nonrejecting period in both groups. Although the concentration-time ratios of CyA in serum and plasma did not differ between the nonrejecting and rejecting periods in Neoral group, they were significantly lower in nonrejecting periods than those in rejecting periods in the Sandimmun group. The ratios of area under the curve (AUC) ratio were significantly lower in the nonrejecting periods in both Neoral and Sandimmun groups. The ratios of maximum CyA concentrations (Cmax) were significantly lower in the rejecting episodes compared to the nonrejecting periods in both Neoral and Sandimmun groups. We examined the relationship between the dose of CyA and its concentrations in plasma or serum. There was a significant correlation between the concentrations of CyA at the time of transplantation and after 1 week in Sandimmun group. In contrast, there was no relationship between the dose of CyA and its concentration in both plasma and serum in Neoral group. These findings suggest that the dose of CyA should be selected based on the concentration of CyA in serum at the time of transplantation, and the concentrations of CyA in plasma and serum after 1 week.Q: How does this circuit produce a square wave? Mean value of various characteristics of different study groups (SLF, MFL) ![[[ijcpd-13-368-g005) DISCUSSION ===== The oral cavity is inhabited by the microorganisms, and when the mouth becomes inflamed, there is an increased amount of mucin in the saliva. Mucins are considered to be the first line of defense for oral mucosa, since they form a protective layer in order to protect the oral cavity from microorganisms. They are present in the oral cavity in the form of glycoproteins. These glycoproteins contain amorphous and cross-linked regions of long-chain polysaccharide chains, which makes them hydrophilic. The abundance of carbohydrate, hydrophilic nature, and insolubility of mucins make them difficult to be retrieved from saliva. Therefore, they cannot be used effectively as a substitute of saliva. However, saliva has proven to be a very useful diagnostic tool for numerous diseases in the oral cavity, including peritumoral syndromes. The mucoadhesive property of the SLF can improve the retention of the drug at the desired site. SLFs are prepared with various film-forming materials like acrylic resins, natural resins, cellulose, and their blends. The mucosal lining of the oral cavity is constantly being renewed; thus, any mechanical and chemical stimulus applied to the mucosal surface has the potential
